ORDER

14 This represented habeas matter under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 comes before the Court on 15 Respondents' motion (#69) to dismiss. Respondents contend that: (a) Grounds 1(A), 1(F) and 16 1(I) are unexhausted; and (b) Grounds 1(A) and 1(H) do not relate back to a claim in the 17 original federal petition.

18 Background

19 Petitioner Johnny Ray Brown challenges his 2002 Nevada state conviction, pursuant 20 to a jury verdict, of three counts of sexual assault and one count each of battery with intent 21 to commit a crime, burglary and grand larceny. He challenged the conviction in the state 22 courts on direct appeal and state post-conviction review. This Court previously found, 23 following an evidentiary hearing, that the original federal petition was timely based upon 24 equitable tolling.

25 Exhaustion

26 Under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(1)(A), a habeas petitioner first must exhaust state court 27 remedies on a claim before presenting that claim to the federal courts. To satisfy this 28 exhaustion requirement, the claim must have been fairly presented to the state courts

1 completely through to the highest court available, in this case the Supreme Court of Nevada.
2 E.g., Peterson v. Lampert, 319 F.3d 1153, 1156 (9th Cir. 2003)(en banc); Vang v. Nevada, 3 329 F.3d 1069, 1075 (9th Cir. 2003). In the state courts, the petitioner must refer to the 4 specific federal constitutional guarantee and must also state the facts that entitle the petitioner
5 to relief on the federal constitutional claim. E.g., Shumway v. Payne, 223 F.3d 983, 987 (9th 6 Cir. 2000). That is, fair presentation requires that the petitioner present the state courts with 7 both the operative facts and the federal legal theory upon which the claim is based. E.g., 8 Castillo v. McFadden, 399 F.3d 993, 999 (9th Cir. 2005). The exhaustion requirement insures 9 that the state courts, as a matter of federal-state comity, will have the first opportunity to pass 10 upon and correct alleged violations of federal constitutional guarantees. See, e.g., Coleman 11 v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 731 (1991).

12 Under Rose v. Lundy, 455 U.S. 509 (1982), a petition presenting both exhausted and 13 unexhausted claims must be dismissed without prejudice unless the petitioner dismisses the 14 unexhausted claims or seeks other appropriate relief.

15 The controlling exhaustion issue presented is whether the claims of ineffective 16 assistance of trial counsel in Grounds 1(A), 1(F) and 1(I) of the Amended Petition (#66) either 17 were fairly presented to the Supreme Court of Nevada on the state post-conviction appeal or 18 were decided by that court. The same basic issue is presented as to each one of the three 19 claims, and the Court therefore discusses the exhaustion issue as to the claims together.

20 In Ground 1(A), Petitioner alleges that he was denied effective assistance of trial
21 counsel when counsel failed to call a metallurgist or similar expert to address whether Brown 22 hit the victim with a cast iron skillet or frying pan with sufficient force to crack the skillet. In 23 Ground 1(F), Petitioner alleges that he was denied effective assistance when trial counsel 24 failed to move to suppress his statement to the police. In Ground 1(I), Petitioner alleges that 25 he was denied effective assistance when trial counsel failed to further develop evidence of the 26 victim's alleged drug use, including calling a proper witness to introduce toxicology reports and 27 hiring an expert to explain the impact of her drug use on her perception of the events in 28 question.

1 The Court proceeds on the premise accepted in the briefing that the claims in federal 2 Grounds 1(A), 1(F), and 1(I) were among the claims of ineffective assistance of trial counsel
3 presented to and/or considered by the state district court.¹

4 In the opening brief on the post-conviction appeal, Brown presented the following issue:
5 "After first finding that trial counsel was ineffective, was it error when the district court failed 6 to find that but for counsel's ineffectiveness there was a reasonable probability that the result 7 of the proceedings would have been different?"² Brown discussed the district court's ruling 8 and sought to maintain that the evidence supporting the conviction was not strong. He 9 concluded the background discussion with the assertion that "[i]t was a physical impossibility 10 that a skillet was broken over the complaining witness' head as reported by her."

11 Brown thereupon argued:

12 That stated, there are four notable and specific failings 13 (among the others already referred to) of the ineffective trial 14 counsel, each of which individually had a prejudicial impact on the 15 ultimate verdict, but which taken cumulatively leave no doubt that 16 the second prong of Strickland was met. These are: (a) failure to 17 move to preclude references to fugitive status, subsequent violent 18 behavior in custody and threats to a corrections officer; (b) 19 opening the door to prior bad acts of the defendant; (c) calling a 20 "defense witness" who painted the defendant as violent while 21 bolstering credibility of Coates; and (d) failure to adequately 22 cross-examine Coates. The trial court stated that trial counsel "did 23 a good job as far as the victim was concerned [with] what she had 24 to work with." (Trans. 11/03/06, p. 71). However, given what was 25 at stake, and the fact that trial counsel's shortcomings shaped 26 what "she had to work with" vitiate the conclusion that the 27 outcome would not have been different had trial counsel 28 objectively performed at even minimal levels of effectiveness.

Regarding the four primary areas of ineffectiveness (and not to discount the almost dozen other instances of failure to prepare and/or object), the case law is clear that Brown was prejudiced.

#31, Ex. 111, at 17-18.

¹See #30, Exhs. 82 (counseled memorandum in support of original state petition), 91 (counseled supplemental petition by substitute counsel) & 99, ¶¶ 9-23 (state district court order).

²#31, Ex. 111, at 1.

1 What followed was seven pages of detailed argument alleging prejudice sustained from 2 the four claims of ineffective assistance of counsel, under (a), (b), (c), and (d) subheadings 3 corresponding to the four claims specified in the above-quoted paragraph. Other than 4 conclusorily "not discounting" the other claims of ineffective assistance of trial counsel 5 presented below in the state district court, Brown did not present any specific argument to the 6 state supreme court as to prejudice sustained as to such claims.³

7 Subsequently, in Brown's reply brief, he sought to take the State to task for not 8 discussing any claims of ineffective assistance of counsel other than the four specifically 9 argued in the appellant's opening brief:

10 Thus framed, the State ventures to offer argument on the 11 four issues highlighted in the Opening Brief. For the sake of 12 brevity, however, the Defendant did highlight four issues, but with 13 the caveat that there at least were numerous other areas of 14 concern where the ineffectiveness of counsel impacted the 15 outcome. (See Opening Brief, pages 11-12, 17-18). The State 16 does not attempt to discuss or distinguish any of these concerns.
 17 In fact, there is no argument whatsoever concerning these areas 18 which include: (1) the failure to call expert witnesses (Trans.
 19 10/06/06, p. 11); (2) concession by counsel that the victim was 20 indeed battered (Trans. 10/06/06, p. 12); (3) failure to follow-up on 21 Coates drug usage, including her non-testimonial admitted use of 22 methamphetamine (Trans. 11/03/06, p. 9-15, 55); (4) failure to 23 offer a self-defense instruction despite the fact that it was the 24 Defendant's theory of the case per his statement introduced at 25 trial (Trans. 11/03/06, p. 18); (5) failure to question the sexual 26 assault nurse regarding the significance of her lack of finding any 27 evidence whatsoever of physical trauma (Trans. 11/03/06, p.
 28 26-27); (6) failure to question any witnesses about a condom found at the scene despite referencing it in closing statements (Trans. 11/03/06, p. 28-30); (7) failure to move to suppress the Defendant's statement despite indicia that he was and is mentally ill (Trans. 11/03/06, p. 32-34, 36).

 Nonetheless, since the State attempts to diminish the totality of impact of the ineffectiveness found by the trial court to be based on a "totality of the circumstances," it is incumbent to identify the weaknesses the State's arguments set forth in their Answering Brief. This is especially true as they relate to the determinative outcome of the errors on the jury verdict.

#31, Ex. 113, at 3-4.

³See #31, Ex. 111, at 18-25.

1 Notably, after taking the State to task for not addressing the seven claims as 2 conclusorily listed in the reply -- which had been referred to in the opening brief as “the almost 3 dozen other instances” of ineffective assistance – Brown then once again provided no 4 argument specific to the claims. He instead presented specific argument only as to the four 5 claims previously specifically argued in the opening brief.⁴

6 In its order of affirmance, the Supreme Court of Nevada stated:

7 8 Finally, in his opening brief Brown made reference to trial 9 counsel's "almost dozen other instances of failure to prepare 10 and/or object." [FN1] Brown did not make any cogent argument 11 regarding these additional claims, but in his reply brief he faults 12 the State for failing to address them in its answering brief. It is the 13 appellant's burden to demonstrate error below. Fairman v. State, 87 Nev. 627, 629, 491 P.2d 1283, 1284 (1971). Because Brown 14 did not present any argument in support of these claims, he fails 15 to demonstrate any error below. Therefore, we conclude that the 16 district court did not err in denying these additional claims.

17 [FN1] In his reply brief, Brown lists seven 18 additional claims. Brown claims that trial counsel: 19 (1) failed to call expert witnesses, (2) conceded that 20 the victim was battered, (3) failed to follow up on 21 the victim's drug usage, (4) failed to offer a 22 self-defense instruction, (5) failed to question the 23 sexual assault nurse about her lack of findings of 24 physical trauma, (6) failed to question any 25 witnesses about a condom found at the crime 26 scene, and (7) failed to move to suppress the 27 defendant's statement to police.

28 #31, Ex. 117, at 5-6.

 Petitioner sought rehearing in part on the ground that the Supreme Court of Nevada improperly concluded that he had failed to present cogent argument on the other claims. He thereupon, once again, provided specific argument regarding only the four claims argued in the opening brief. The Supreme Court of Nevada denied the rehearing petition with a one-line citation to Rule 40(c) of the Nevada Rules of Appellate Procedure.⁵

⁴See #31, Ex. 113, at 3-12.

⁵#31, Exhs. 119 & 120.

1 Brown's briefing in the Supreme Court of Nevada constituted the very antithesis of fair 2 presentation of the unargued claims. A holding in that circumstance that the unargued claims 3 were deemed waived or abandoned, with no disposition of the claims on the merits, would 4 have been in accord with the well-established, if not near ubiquitous, practice of state and 5 federal appellate courts generally. See, e.g., Nevada Department of Corrections v. Greene, 6 648 F.3d 1014, 1020 (9th Cir. 2011).

7 Significantly, however, Respondents concede that the Supreme Court of Nevada 8 denied the claims on the merits and thus exhausted the claims by actually deciding the claims 9 on the merits.⁶

10 Respondents further contend, however, that the claims were considered on the merits 11 only as conclusorily presented to the Supreme Court of Nevada, such that the fully-articulated 12 claims in the Amended Petition fundamentally alter the claims exhausted in the state supreme 13 court.

14 While the argument is not without force, the Court is not persuaded that Respondents 15 successfully can put that fine a point on the issue once they concede that the Supreme Court 16 of Nevada affirmed the lower court's decision on the claims on the merits.

17 Under Ylst v. Nunnemaker, 501 U.S. 797 (1991), "[i]f the last state court to be 18 presented with a particular federal claim reaches the merits, it removes any bar to federal-19 court review that otherwise might have been available." 501 U.S. at 801. A rebuttable 20 presumption instead applies that "[w]here there has been one reasoned state judgment 21 rejecting a federal claim, later unexplained orders upholding that judgment or rejecting the 22 same claim rest upon the same ground." 501 U.S. at 803. "Strong evidence" is necessary 23 to rebut the presumption. 501 U.S. at 804. Absent such strong evidence, the federal courts 24 look to the last reasoned decision by the lower state court where the higher state court has 25 issued a summary affirmance. 501 U.S. at 805.

26 ////

27
28 ⁶#73, at 4, lines 4-17.

1 Such “strong evidence” to overcome the presumption of adjudication is not present 2 here. The Supreme Court of Nevada held that “the district court did not err in denying these 3 additional claims.” If the state supreme court is going to thereby summarily affirm the state 4 district court’s rejection of the claim on the merits, then the claim, as presented to the lower 5 court, is exhausted. That conclusion follows even where the affirmance is based upon the 6 petitioner not carrying his burden of proof on appeal (as opposed to a finding instead of waiver 7 or abandonment of the claim). The default rule in the general context of exhaustion is that 8 ambiguity in the state court’s language regarding the disposition of the claim leads to a 9 conclusion that the claim is exhausted. Cf. Chambers v. McDaniel, 549 F.3d 1191, 1197-98 10 (9th Cir. 2008)(ambiguous language in order denying original writ petition in state supreme 11 court constituted an adjudication on the merits). The Supreme Court of Nevada readily can 12 employ unambiguous language in a situation such as this that would not result in the claim 13 presented in the state district court being ruled upon on appeal and exhausted. The language 14 employed on the state post-conviction appeal in this case, however, does lead to that result, 15 i.e., of the claim presented in the district court being ruled upon on appeal and exhausted.

16 The Court further is not persuaded by Respondents’ alternative argument on these 17 three grounds that the claims decided in the state supreme court’s opinion – as generally 18 described therein – did not exhaust the claims described with greater particularity in the state 19 district court (and thereafter in the Amended Petition). The state high court, again, held that 20 “the district court did not err in denying these additional claims,” referring, by definition, to the 21 claims presented in the state district court.

22 Respondents otherwise do not contend that the factual assertions in these grounds in 23 the Amended Petition fundamentally altered the claims as presented to the state district court.

24 Grounds 1(A), 1(F), and 1(I) are exhausted.⁷

26 ⁷Respondents suggested at one point in the motion to dismiss that Grounds 1(G) and 1(H) were not 27 exhausted. See #69, at 5, lines 2-3 & 6. Respondents provided no further argument in this regard, however.
28 Petitioner noted in his opposition Respondents’ failure to provide further argument as to any alleged lack of exhaustion of these claims. #72, at 3 n.2. Respondents did not contend otherwise in their reply. Under Local

Relation Back

A new claim in an amended petition that is filed after the expiration of the one-year limitation period will be timely only if the new claim relates back to a claim in a timely-filed pleading under Rule 15(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, on the basis that the claim arises out of “the same conduct, transaction or occurrence” as a claim in the timely pleading. Mayle v. Felix, 545 U.S. 644 (2005). In Mayle, the Supreme Court held that habeas claims in an amended petition do not arise out of “the same conduct, transaction or occurrence” as claims in the original petition merely because the claims all challenge the same trial, conviction or sentence. 545 U.S. at 655-64. Rather, under the construction of the rule approved in Mayle, Rule 15(c) permits relation back of habeas claims asserted in an amended petition “only when the claims added by amendment arise from the same core facts as the timely filed claims, and not when the new claims depend upon events separate in ‘both time and type’ from the originally raised episodes.” 545 U.S. at 657. In this regard, the reviewing court looks to “the existence of a common ‘core of operative facts’ uniting the original and newly asserted claims.” A claim that merely adds “a new legal theory tied to the same operative facts as those initially alleged” will relate back and be timely. 545 U.S. at 659 & n.5.

Respondents challenge the relation back of Grounds 1(A) and 1(H).

Petitioner raises a number of general arguments that the Court finds unpersuasive.

The Court is not persuaded by Petitioner's suggestion that Mayle establishes a two-part analysis where the Court determines, first, whether the claim is “a new ground for relief” and, second, whether the ground is supported by facts different in time and type from those in the

Rule LR 7-2(d), the Court accordingly deems abandoned any argument or suggestion that Grounds 1(G) and 1(H) are not exhausted, on the basis that Respondents have consented to a denial of the motion in that regard.

While the Court rules against Respondents' position on the issue of the exhaustion of Grounds 1(A), 1(F), and 1(I), that does not signify that their argument is without arguable force. Cf. Sandgathe v. Maass, 314 F.3d 371, 383-84 (9th Cir. 2002)(O'Scannlain, J., concurring in the judgment)(maintaining on the record presented that the claim first had to be presented to the appellate court before looking through to the lower court decision under Ylst). Moreover, if the controlling question instead were one solely of whether Petitioner had fairly presented the claims in his appellate briefing, the Court would be inclined to hold that he did not.

1 original petition. See #72, at 11. Nothing in the portion of Mayle cited by Petitioner states
2 such a two-part test. The Supreme Court's references to a claim being "new" did not state 3 part of a test but instead merely were contextual. Obviously, if the amended petition merely 4 realleged the claims in the prior petition, there would be no relation-back issue in the first 5 instance. Nor is the Court satisfied that seeking to determine whether a ground is a "new"
6 ground adds anything of significance to the analysis. The issue under Mayle is a simple 7 question of whether "the claims added by amendment arise from the same core facts as the 8 timely filed claims." Regardless of whether claims in an amended petition are in some sense 9 or another "new," the only pertinent inquiry on relation back is whether the challenged claims 10 in the amended petition arise from the same core facts as timely-filed claims in the prior 11 petition.

12 Second, the Court is not persuaded by Petitioner's suggestion that relation back simply 13 is a question of whether the original petition "provided notice of a claim." The governing 14 standard in Mayle, again, is straightforward and simple.⁸ Petitioner's argument that such 15 "notice" may be provided by petitioner's state court pleadings is even less persuasive, to the 16 point of frivolity. The question here is relation back to the prior federal petition. What 17 petitioner alleged in state court pleadings has nil significance on the issue of relation back.
18 Petitioner clearly may not "relate back" to his state court filings.

19 Third, the Court is not persuaded that the unpublished order appointing counsel in 20 Cisneros v. Baker, No. 3:13-cv-00033-LRH-VPC (D. Nev. Mar. 7, 2013), establishes that the 21 Court "should also consider all documents and exhibits attached to Brown's petition in its 22 determination of whether the claims in the amended petition relate back to the original 23 petition." #72, at 12. Cisneros stated the Court's construction of the papers presented therein.
24 Prior federal district court orders are not binding precedent within the district. There are 25 myriad other orders in other habeas cases in this Court – based upon the circumstances in 26

27 ⁸Petitioner further might note that the Valdovinos decision cited in his brief was vacated by the 28 Supreme Court on other grounds. The panel decision in any event did not establish a "notice" rule that overrides the controlling standard stated by the Supreme Court.

1 those cases – expressly requiring the petitioner to specifically allege his claims within the body 2 of the petition form itself without incorporation of exhibits, as is required by the instructions for 3 the petition form.⁹ Moreover, the first page of the petition form further requires that the 4 petitioner attach all state court written decisions with the federal petition. Such attachment 5 does not in and of itself constitute the assertion of any claims.¹⁰ Cisneros states no 6 overarching rule in this District that claims in later pleadings relate back to exhibits submitted 7 with the original petition as to claims not alleged within the body of the original federal petition.
8 In short, nothing in the unpublished order appointing counsel in Cisneros sought to, or could, 9 override the governing Supreme Court precedent in Mayle that federal habeas pleading is not 10 notice pleading and that claims instead must be alleged with particularity. See 545 U.S. at 11 655-56.

12 Against this backdrop, the Court turns to Petitioner's argument specific to the 13 challenged grounds, which he argues together.

14 Petitioner alleges in Ground 1(A) that he was denied effective assistance of trial
15 counsel when counsel failed to call a metallurgist or similar expert to address whether Brown 16 hit the victim with a cast iron skillet or frying pan with sufficient force to crack the skillet.
17 Petitioner alleges in Ground 1(H) that he was denied effective assistance of trial counsel when 18 counsel allegedly failed to offer instructions on the theory of the defense and for allegedly 19 conceding that he was guilty of battery.

20 As to the original federal petition, Petitioner urges that these claims relate back to 21 allegations under original Ground 4 -- alleging that the state district court erred in not finding 22 prejudice under Strickland-- asserting that he had "demonstrated a variety of points to support 23 his claim" of ineffective assistance in the state petition, that he had been prejudiced by the 24 "overall cumulative affect [sic] of trial counsel's errors," and that he "also raised at least a

26 ⁹See Instructions, ¶ (A)(7); see, e.g., Stewart v. State of Nevada, 2:09-cv-01063-PMP-GWF, #19, at 3 27 (D. Nev. Feb. 9, 2010); Rankin v. Skolnik, 3:09-cv-00145-LRH-VPC, #13, at 2 (D. Nev. Nov. 25, 2009).

28 ¹⁰State court decisions were all that were attached as exhibits with the original petition, just as the form required.

1 dozen other points of error.”¹¹

2 Conclutory allegations only that a petitioner demonstrated a “variety of points” of 3 alleged ineffective assistance of trial counsel, that he was prejudiced by the cumulative effect 4 of unspecified errors by counsel, and/or that he “raised at least a dozen other points of error” 5 do not provide a basis for relation back of any particular ineffective-assistance claim that the 6 petitioner thereafter might seek to pursue. Such conclusory allegations do not state any claim 7 in the first instance, under notice pleading or otherwise. Such conclusory allegations provide 8 nothing to which to relate back. Under Mayle, habeas pleading indisputably is not notice 9 pleading. A finding of relation back based upon such conclusory allegations would eviscerate 10 Mayle’s holding.

11 Otherwise, petitioner seeks essentially to establish relation back to his state court filings 12 and to copies of state court decisions that the federal petition form required to be attached 13 with the Petition.¹² For the reasons discussed above, these efforts are ineffectual. Petitioner’s 14 multiple arguments begging the very simple and straightforward question at issue under Mayle 15 are unpersuasive.

16 Grounds 1(A) and 1(H) do not relate back to the original federal petition.

17 Alleged Post-Filing Equitable Tolling

18 Petitioner contends that he is entitled to equitable tolling from the constructive pro se 19 filing of the pro se original federal petition on or about March 18, 2010, through the filing of the 20 counseled amended federal petition on January 30, 2013.

21 In prior cases, this Court has sought to have the Federal Public Defender present 22 apposite case authority, if any, supporting a claim that such alleged equitable tolling is 23 available after the original federal petition is filed. Counsel has not provided such authority 24 in the past. Nor does counsel do so now, other than to contend that no authority precludes 25

26 ¹¹#6, at 15-16 & 25.

27 ¹²The Court does not necessarily hold by implication that the actual content of the required copies of 28 the state court written decisions would be sufficient for relation back even if they were pertinent to the issue.

1 such equitable tolling.

2 The rule in 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(D) of course provides a petitioner with a per-claim 3 rule of delayed accrual where the factual predicate of a claim could not have been discovered 4 previously through the exercise of due diligence. Here, however, the claims in question were 5 discovered – and asserted in the state courts – long ago. They clearly are not claims that 6 neither petitioner nor his counsel could discover prior to January 30, 2013, or a year earlier 7 prior to January 30, 2012.

8 Petitioner, again, presents no apposite case authority holding that he is entitled to post-9 filing equitable tolling from the filing of the pro se federal petition to whenever federal habeas 10 counsel ultimately files a counseled amended petition. Quite arguably, the discovery rule in 11 § 2244(d)(1)(D) more than adequately addresses the circumstance where the original petition 12 is rendered timely by equitable tolling but additional respite from the federal limitation period 13 is required for particular claims. Again, Grounds 1(A) and 1(H) do not qualify for delayed 14 accrual under § 2244(d)(1)(D) because they long have been claims known or knowable to 15 petitioner and federal habeas counsel.

16 Even if the Court otherwise were to assume that such post-filing equitable tolling might 17 be available in an appropriate case – for claims not otherwise rendered timely by the 18 discovery rule in § 2244(d)(1)(D) -- this is not such a case.

19 The Court granted Petitioner's motion for appointment of counsel on July 28, 2010.
20 The Court did so within four months of the actual filing of the Petition, following an initial show-21 cause inquiry as to timeliness. The Court's Order, plainly stated:

22 The Court anticipates at this juncture that, in the 23 order confirming the appointment of the individual attorney, the 24 Court then will allow the represented Petitioner ninety days for 25 counsel to investigate the matter and file a counseled 26 supplemental response to the show cause inquiry. If appointed 27 counsel instead would prefer to file an amended petition before responding to the show cause inquiry, Petitioner will be able to file a motion by the ninety day deadline to modify the scheduling order and establish a deadline for filing an amended petition. The 28 Court then will screen the amended pleading before directing further action.

1 #10, at 1 (emphasis added).

2 Thereafter, the Court's orders (## 14; 18; & 25, at 6) established and then extended 3 the deadline for the represented petitioner to either supplement his pro se show-cause 4 response or file an amended petition. The Court further again expressly stated: "Nothing in 5 the Court's orders halts the running of the federal limitation period as to the Petition or any 6 claim absent an express direction to that effect." #15 (filed November 8, 2010).

7 Hence, nothing prevented petitioner at any time from filing an amended petition 8 asserting, inter alia, Grounds 1(A) and 1(H).¹³ The represented petitioner clearly could have 9 filed an amended petition at any time, without waiting for the conclusion of the show-cause 10 proceedings, adding at the very least known claims that would be evident to federal habeas 11 counsel from the state court pleadings. Cf. Waldron-Ramsey v. Pacholke, 556 F.3d 1008, 12 1014 (9th Cir. 2009)(the pro se petitioner's lack of access to all of his files did not provide a 13 viable basis even for pre-filing equitable tolling because he could have filed a timely original 14 petition and then sought to amend to allege additional information).

15 The Court plainly has put the Petitioner on notice that the mere appointment of counsel 16 does not necessitate a conclusion that the represented petitioner thereafter will be entitled to 17 equitable tolling up until when counsel ultimately files an amended petition. If counsel makes 18 a decision to instead first litigate the overall timeliness of the petition – particularly where the 19 Court expressly has given Petitioner the option to proceed otherwise – counsel clearly should 20 not expect for the petitioner to be given the benefit of post-filing equitable tolling for known 21 claims that could have been presented long before the counseled amended petition is filed.

24 ¹³Equitable tolling is appropriate – pre-filing – only if the petitioner can show that: (1) he has been 25 pursuing his rights diligently, and (2) some extraordinary circumstance stood in his way and prevented timely 26 filing. Holland v. Florida, 130 S.Ct. 2549, 1085 (2010). Equitable tolling is "unavailable in most cases," Miles 27 v. Prunty, 187 F.3d 1104, 1107 (9th Cir.1999), and "the threshold necessary to trigger equitable tolling is very 28 high, lest the exceptions swallow the rule," Miranda v. Castro, 292 F.3d 1063, 1066 (9th Cir.2002)(quoting United States v. Marcello, 212 F.3d 1005, 1010 (7th Cir.2000)). The petitioner ultimately has the burden of proof on this "extraordinary exclusion." 292 F.3d at 1065. He accordingly must demonstrate a causal relationship between the extraordinary circumstance and the lateness of his filing. E.g., Spitsyn v. Moore, 345 F.3d 796, 799 (9th Cir. 2003). Accord Bryant v. Arizona Attorney General, 499 F.3d 1056, 1061 (9th Cir.
2007).

1 The Amended Petition was filed over two years after counsel was appointed. Even on 2 the dubious assumption that equitable tolling may be available post-filing separate and apart
3 from the discovery rule in § 2244(d)(1)(D), Petitioner clearly has not demonstrated a viable
4 basis for such relief here.¹⁴

5 Grounds 1(A) and 1(H) therefore will be dismissed with prejudice as untimely.¹⁵

6 IT THEREFORE IS ORDERED that Respondents' motion (#69) to dismiss is 7 GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART such that Grounds 1(A) and 1(H) are DISMISSED 8 with prejudice as untimely.

9 IT FURTHER IS ORDERED that, within thirty (30) days of entry of this order, 10 Respondents shall file an Answer to the remaining grounds in the Amended Petition and that 11 Petitioner shall have thirty (30) days from service of the Answer to file a Reply.

24 ¹⁴Petitioner's arguments that his claims were exhausted, that the claims present alleged federal 25 constitutional violations, that a petitioner only may pursue one federal petition, and that he allegedly has 26 actively litigated in state and federal court all beg the question. Such arguments would not provide a basis 27 even for pre-filing equitable tolling. Petitioner's further bare suggestion that it would be "unfair" to deny him 28 further equitable tolling does not present any viable argument for equitable tolling.

¹⁵While Respondents also reference Grounds 1(G) and 1(I) in their description of the procedural background, the Court does not read the motion to dismiss as contending that those claims do not relate back. See #69, at 9. Respondents did not contend at any point following the reference to the assertion of the claims in the Amended Petition that the claims did not relate back or otherwise were untimely.

1 IT FURTHER IS ORDERED that no extensions of the deadlines established herein will 2 be considered except in the most extraordinary circumstances. Requests for extensions of 3 time based upon scheduling conflicts between the demands of cases in this District should be 4 sought in the later-filed case.¹⁶

26 ¹⁶This case was a reportable three-year case under the Civil Justice Reform Act (CJRA) for the most 27 recent semiannual reporting period for March 31, 2013. The Court's intention is to have the case fully 28 resolved before the next reporting deadline of September 30, 2013. That does not signify in any sense that delay has been the fault of any party or counsel. The Court simply must get the case decided, as it seeks to resolve all matters as promptly as possible even without regard to the CJRA. Habeas actions are civil actions under federal practice and are subject to the Act's reporting requirements.
